failed most miserably in 1918? Winclude him among the White Sox sets? Cicotte was "through"-so

Miller Huggins pet in the fight. Without either, the Yanks now would be in second division instead of being discussed as pennant possibilities.

In Cleveland the selection is sightly different inasmuch as two batsmen, from whom little was expected, have come through with a hurrah just at a time when the star hitters became impotent with the mace. Elmer Smith and Dock Johnson make up the pair. Nothing much was expected of them in a clouting way as the season began. It was figured that Speaker, Chapman and a few others would lead the assault for the Indians.

The mid-season mark is now long past. Speaker is far down in the .260 class, Chapman is well removed from the .360 figure, and O'Neill, Gardner Wambsganss and Graney are wallowing in the depths. They are of but little help in the clouting branch.

But where the best bludgeon wielders of the club slipped, smith and Johnson seized the burden and began batting in amazing fashion. Both have been macing around .325 or so, and it is their consistent hitting that has won many contests and kept the Indians in the fight.—Copyright, 1919.
